

STATE SUPREME COURT DECIDES AGAINST EARLE ADMINISTRATION IN PREVENTING GRAND JURY PROBE

Decision Outlaws Two of The Three Acts Governor Rushed Through a Special Session of the Legislature—Upholds Third Act, But District Attorney's Ineligibility Must Be Fully Proved To the Court.

(By International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 3—Governor George H. Earle today lost his long-bitter battle to prevent a Grand Jury investigation of serious charges against himself and his administration and Democratic party leaders, as the State Supreme Court outlawed two of the three acts he rushed through a special session of the Legislature.

The third act, that giving Attorney General Bard the right to supercede District Attorney Carl B. Shelley of Dauphin County, in conducting the Grand Jury investigation, was upheld, but the Court ruled that before Shelley may be superceded, the District Attorney's ineligibility must be fully proved to its satisfaction.

To accomplish this, it directed Judge Paul Schaeffer of Berks County, specially assigned to the case, to hear further testimony.

Bard, however, the decision made clear, will not personally conduct the Grand Jury investigation. The Supreme Court, in the decision, written by Judge Horace Stern, expressed the opinion he could not under any circumstances perform his duties impartially, because as an appointee of the Governor, will be subject to dismissal by him.

Instead, the high court points out, the act provides that if such is the case, the court shall appoint an attorney from another county to conduct the investigation. Further, the Supreme Court disclosed, Bard in his petition had admitted his ineligibility and disclaimed any intention of handling the proceedings personally. The court dismissed the Bard petition for supercession, directed Judge Schaeffer to decide whether Shelley should be superceded, and if it so decides to appoint an attorney from another county to conduct the probe in Shelley's stead. The Supreme Court ruled that all documentary evidence is to be simultaneously available to both the Grand Jury and the House Investigating Committee.

The two acts which were held unconstitutional, suspended the projected Grand Jury probe which Shelley is already prepared to begin at once, and lodged in the House of Representatives the sole jurisdiction to conduct the investigation.

Breaking precedent another time, the Supreme Court issued the following release to the press, explaining its decision: "The Supreme Court in an unanimous order, decided that the Grand Jury could proceed with its investigation. Chief Justice Kephart and Justice Drew, concurred in the order. The opinion written by Mr. Justice Linn, holds that the act suspending the Grand Jury was unconstitutional, as an attempt to suspend criminal laws, and an invasion of judicial powers. The order of the court dismissing the petition for the writ of prohibition, prevents an unseemly contest that might arise between the judicial and legislative bodies."

Past Grands' Association Holds Fall Meeting Here

The Past Grands' Association of Southeastern Pennsylvania, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, held its first meeting of the Fall, in Bristol, Saturday evening. The men assembled at the I. O. O. F. hall, and with the American Legion Cadets heading the line, conducted a short street parade to the Methodist Church, where the session was held.

The association conducted a short business session, and greetings were extended by the Rev. J. Carpenter Zook, pastor of the Bristol Methodist Church.

The speaker of the evening was the Rev. C. F. Freeman, past grand chaplain of the Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. of Pennsylvania; also president of the National Brotherhood of the Reformed Church.

"We Are Living in Tremendous Times" was the topic of the speaker, who called attention to the rebuilding of civilization and the building of a new world. He stressed the fact that today more than ever there is great need for friendship and he urged the Odd Fellows to play their part and promote friendship in the world today.

A pleasing program of entertainment was given, consisting of acts by a magician, an acrobatic pair, and the Hillbillies' Band of Mystic Lodge, of Holmesburg.

A light lunch was served as a concluding feature.

Warsaw, Oct. 3—More Polish troops today marched into Teschen's main thoroughfare—speedily renamed "Marshall Pilsudski Street"—and took control of this Reich mining and factory district in the heels of departing Czechs. The first Polish troops, advance guard of an army of 500,000 which menaced Czechoslovakia from above the frontier, strode across the Olza River bridge at 2 p. m. yesterday. By October 10, the whole Teschen area with its many coal mines, will be occupied, and a plebiscite under international direction is to be held in upper sections where there is a possible Polish majority.

Hitler Enters Eger

(By Pierre J. Huss)

Eger, Sudetenland, Oct. 3—The unsheathed German sword is a guarantee that the Sudetenland "never again will be torn from the Reich," Chancellor Hitler told a wildly-cheering crowd on his triumphal entry into Eger today.

After leading his victorious army across the old German-Czech border, the Fuehrer spoke briefly to the Eger population. "German people," he said, "I am greeting not only you, but the entire Sudetenland, which within a few days will belong completely to the German Reich."

Through a mountain pass at Wilidenau, lined with thousands of Sudeten Germans, who braved a rainstorm to greet him, the Fuehrer drove to Czech on the heels of 50,000 marching men.

The Fuehrer's personal retinue included Henlein, Walter Von Reichenau, Police Chief Heinrich Himmler, and Chief of Staff General Wilhelm Keigel.

With these men at his side, the Fuehrer watched troops of the 16th Army Corps march into flag-bedecked Eger, followed by the first tank division and the 13th Infantry Division.

The Fuehrer's personal retinue included Henlein, Walter Von Reichenau, Police Chief Heinrich Himmler, and Chief of Staff General Wilhelm Keigel.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Walter M. Carwithen, well known Doylestown businessman and widely known in Masonic circles, on Wednesday evening received a telegram from Columbus, Ohio, announcing that he had been elected a 33rd Degree Mason, and that he will receive his degree at the next meeting of the Supreme Council of the Northern Masonic Jurisdiction of the U. S. A. to be held in Boston, Mass., next month.

Mr. Carwithen's election to this honor came after he had devoted a number of years to work in the fraternity. In addition to being Grand King of the Grand Holy Royal Arch Chapter of Pennsylvania, Mr. Carwithen is district deputy of District 8 of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

He served as worshipful master of Doylestown Lodge, No. 245, F. and A. M., in 1920, and at present he is treasurer of the lodge. Mr. Carwithen also was High Priest of Doylestown Royal Arch Chapter, No. 270, in 1923, and Eminent Commander of Mizpah Commandery, No. 96, Knights Templar, Doylestown, in 1926. He at present is treasurer of the Commandery and secretary of the Royal Arch Chapter.

The Armistice Day Committee of Jesse W. Soby Post, American Legion, Langhorne, will meet at the Community Memorial House, Langhorne, on Wednesday evening, at 8 o'clock, to make plans for the observance of the day. An invitation is extended to representatives of all churches and civic organizations in the community to attend and assist in arranging for the celebration.

October 18 will mark the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Bucks County School Directors' Association and plans are under way for the proper celebration of the event, at a meeting to be held at Doylestown on that date. The exercises will include the reading of historical papers on Bucks county schools. Further details will be given by Walter S. Miller, of Parkland, a member of the Middletown Township School Board, is the president of the county group. He is also president of the Bucks County Unit Board.

In connection with the celebration, an effort is being made to locate all surviving school directors or teachers who were in service in the county 50 years ago. Anyone knowing of such veterans in the educational service of the county are requested to advise the Association of the names and addresses of the same.

Mabel Ridge Briggs, of Langhorne, was the purchaser of the 69-acre property of the late Dr. William H. Ridge at a largely attended sale held on the property which is located in Bensalem township on the Lincoln Highway, near Langhorne.

Bidding on the property, which had been in the possession of the Ridge family for several generations, started at about $18,000 and the price paid for it was $29,500.

On the property, one of the most attractive in this section, is a woodland tract of two acres. The buildings include a house, barn, two garages, tourist cabin, restaurant, gasoline station and several other buildings.

NUPTIAL CEREMONIES INTEREST BRISTOLIANS

Yanchis-Pisturo Wedding Occurs Sunday in St. Ann's R. C. Church

FERRAZZANO-VANNUCCI

St. Ann's Catholic Church was the scene of a wedding Sunday afternoon, when Miss Clementine J. Pisturo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Pisturo, 518 Pond street, became the bride of Frank J. Yanchis, son of Adam Yanchis, Brooklyn, N. Y. The Rev. Peter Pinci performed the ceremony at 3:30 o'clock.

The bride was attended by Miss Clementina Conca, Lafayette street, a cousin of the bride, as maid of honor; Miss Mary Sagolla, Otter street, and Miss Adeline Rocco, 506 Pond street, a cousin of the bride, as bridesmaids. Serving the groom as best man was James Rocco, 506 Pond street, cousin of the bride, and the usher was Bernard Kogel, Croydon.

The bride was gown in white satin fashioned on Princess lines. The sleeveless bodice had the square cut neckline and the long full skirt ended with a short train. With this was worn a lace jacket which fastened in front with satin covered buttons. The jacket featured a high standing collar trimmed with orange blossoms, and the long sleeves were puffed at the shoulder. Attached to the jacket was a long paneled train of lace and satin. The bridal veil of tulle with face veil, had a crown of satin and tulle. Her slippers were white satin and she carried white lilies.

The maid of honor was attractive in a gown of aqua tone taffeta. The bodice was made with the V-shape neckline in front and cut square in back. The sleeves were short and puffed, and the long skirt was very full. A dubonnet velvet bow finished the neckline in front and the skirt had velvet trimming of the same tone. A belt of taffeta encircled her waistline. A doll hat in aqua tone taffeta trimmed with a sprig of dubonnet flowers, and dubonnet velvet sandals, completed her costume, and she carried a colonial bouquet of red roses.

The bridesmaids were attired in gowns fashioned like the maid of honor but different in color. Their gowns were rose tone taffet with dubonnet velvet trimmings, and they wore dubonnet velvet sandals, rose tone doll hats with dubonnet flowers, and each carried red roses.

A reception for the immediate families was held at the home of the bride's parents. Previous to the ceremony, a dinner was served to 25 guests.

The couple left for several days' trip to New York and Niagara Falls. The bride travelled in a dubonnet dress, black coat and accessories. The couple will make their home with the bride's parents. The bride graduated from St. Ann's School and is employed at Smith & Diamond, Inc., Croydon. The groom is a graduate of the Brooklyn high school, Williamsburg Trade School and Manhattan School of Aviation Trades. He is employed by Fleetwings, Inc.

A wedding took place in St. Ann's Church, Saturday at 3 p. m., when Miss Rose Vannucci, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vannucci, was married to Mr. Vannucci.

Community Center To Repair Toys For X'mas

The Bristol Community Center is collecting toys. Any toy is acceptable—discarded, broken, defaced or mutilated. These will be repaired, painted and distributed at Christmas time to the poor children of Bristol and vicinity. A phone call to the Community Center, Bristol 3118, or to Albert Hartman, Director of the Center, Morrisville 8-787, will bring someone to collect the toys that you have to offer. Marty Green and his committee of Messrs. Frank Voit, Warren P. Snyder, Dr. J. Fred Wagner and Frank Wallin, will be glad to have your co-operation in securing hundreds of toys for this project.

The work of repairing, repainting, and rejuvenating these will be done by boys and girls from Bristol and vicinity in the National Youth Administration workshop under the supervision of Mr. Hartman.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

They Have To Be Happy

Washington, Oct. 1.

THE drafting of Gov. Herbert Lehman as a candidate for the fourth time in New York marks the mortifying end of a long series of futile, and at times, absurd, political maneuvers by the White House politicians. To those who know the facts it exhibits the complete hollowness of two ideas quite widely cherished up to about two months ago but now pretty well shot to pieces.

THE first of these was that the White House weight is irresistible in party politics; the second, that the little group of accordion-playing, "forward-looking" advisers who exert so much influence with Mr. Roosevelt are really men of discernment and ability. In politics they have definitely proved to be smarties rather than smart, and nowhere has this been quite so clearly shown as in New York. Because, notwithstanding that "I am very happy" message he sent to the convention, the Lehman nomination is a most unpalatable dose to the President personally and the very last thing his "board of strategy" wanted or expected.

IF this time last year it had been so much as suggested that they would first have to plead with Governor Lehman to run again and then cheer the man and applaud his record, they would have hooted in derision. At that time Governor Lehman, who in August had taken a firm and effective stand against Mr. Roosevelt's effort to pack the Supreme Court, was the chief target of the infuriated White House sharpshooters. He was deluged with denunciation by inspired New Deal spokesmen, disparaged both personally and politically in various ways. Some of those now shouting "How happy we are!" a short time ago were calling him a Judas and a Benedict Arnold. They said he had stabbed his friend (Mr. Roosevelt) in the back, and that he

HOW TO HUNT A JOB

The curriculum of the high schools has undergone many changes and extensions and has come to include a heterogeneous assortment of subjects unheard of in the school days of the parents of the present generation of pupils in the secondary schools. But, so far as can be ascertained by the National Occupational Conference, only one city in America has placed on the "must" list a course in job-finding.

That city is Oakland, Cal. The name of the course is How to Hunt a Job. It is not elective, but required of every high school senior and no one can be graduated without passing an examination in this subject. All the work of the elementary and secondary schools is of no avail to the Oakland pupils unless they can prove to their teachers that they have put to good use the lessons taught in this course, which was established last year and is included again in the schedule for 1938-1939.

The problem of employment for the youth of the nation is vital. Establishment by the Oakland school system of a department of occupational adjustment has for its purpose the co-ordination of education, training, ambition, qualification and placement activities. The job question is so important that many officials in responsible positions in education have come to regard the Oakland development as more than a mere experiment, but as an example of what others throughout the country may be called upon to do for all the youth of their communities—those in school as well as those out of school.

Lectures, motion pictures, quizzes, exercises in deportment, tests in occupational fitness, all these will not create jobs, but they may be helpful in cutting down the period of idleness following graduation. The experience of those in charge of the work at Oxford has encouraged the continuance of the course, because of the favorable record of last year's graduates placed in good jobs.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol Mar. 8, 1877. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

LANGHORNE—Our railroad has increased the dairy activity in our vicinity, and good milking cows command high prices at the many public sales in our midst.

The pupils of Mrs. Hanna M. Albert are much disturbed in spirit over her resignation, which takes place next week, after two years' faithful performance of her duty. Mr. Dyer, living near Brownsville, will succeed her.

Last Monday evening, Mr. James Brudon, one of our best known and most esteemed citizens, attained the good old age of 72 years. His relatives took advantage of the opportunity thus presented, of making it a time to be pleasantly remembered, by giving him a birthday surprise party. Thirty-six of his descendants, children and grandchildren, were present, and presented him with a landscape made from the hair of each of those present, and altogether the gathering was as agreeable as his character was unusual.

The topic which has been most discussed this week is "Who shall be postmaster?" Dr. William B. Baker and William Jones are hard at work looking up voters. William H. Paxson did not present his name to be voted for, and is therefore out in the cold altogether, while postmaster Mears, who also refrained from taking part in the election, is relying on a petition, which is circulating, to induce the president to consider his claims before making a change.

Last night burglars entered the residence of Rev. P. A. Lynch, by prying up one of the windows, pushing back the blinds and breaking the fastenings. But for some reason, because they became alarmed it is supposed, posed, they departed without taking anything as far as can be discovered at present.

A special meeting of council was held last evening to appoint a policeman. Anthony Thorpe was appointed at a salary of $10 a week. The borough will provide him with a badge, so that the wayfaring man and the public in general may know that he is one having authority.

"The ELEVEN OF DIAMONDS"

by BAYNARD H. KENDRICK

CHAPTER XXIX

Dawson took an envelope from his pocket and dumped the contents out on the table. "I picked these out of the ashes in front of the shack. That's why I thought the bottle might be important."

On the table lay the charred remains of five playing cards. Stan only needed a glance to know that the crimson design on the backs matched the eleven of diamonds found on the pack in the Sunset.

"Can you find that key again?" "I can go there in the dark," said Dawson.

"If I get a boat you are game to try it tonight?"

"I commanded a sub-chaser during the war." There was a glint of adventure in his gray-green eyes. "I'd certainly hate to think I was too old now to navigate a cruiser. But I don't think you're going to find much more than I have."

"I'm funny that way," said Stan. "Sometimes I see a lot more on the water than I do on land. Since Saturday all I've been able to unearth in Miami is gobs of trouble. Maybe I'll do better on Old Rhodes Key."

Late that afternoon he had a report from Fred Fawcett that the milk bottle showed up latent finger prints of Toby Munroe.

"I'd be glad to have you use the Swampfire," Bruce Farraday said earnestly, "but I have no crew this week. Captain Richards has gone to Jacksonville, and I told the men they could take time off."

Stan walked to the window of Farraday's room and stared down at the cruiser moored to the Royal Palm docks. The murkiness of the day failed to hide the sleek sheen of the Swampfire's mahogany and chromium plate. "How many does it take to man her?"

"She has a set of one man controls aft. I had her built as a combination for cruising and deep sea fishing. Of course I wouldn't want to take her out with less than three on board. Ordinarily I want the engineer and Captain, minimum. The pilot room forward has a telegraph to the engine room. When I handle her myself, though, I always use the aft controls."

"Would you chance her with your self, Commander Dawson, and me?" Dawson and I are both licensed for boats over sixty feet, and I'm considered better than most with engines."

Farraday came and stood beside him at the window. "What about the weather?"

"I can't report on it before I came here. It'll be cloudy and dark to night but the wind's dropping. Outside of a heavy swell we should have easy going."

"What do you hope to find?" Farraday asked the question without looking at Stan.

"Maybe nothing. Maybe enough to straighten out everything. It's because of the uncertainty that I'm so anxious to go without delay."

"Is it dangerous?"

"Hardly. There was an amused quirk to Stan's lips. "I think on the Swampfire I'll feel safe for the first time in several days. I'm going to ask Captain LeRoy to go along."

"I'll do it," Farraday was decisive. "I'll have to take Tolliver along. He knows the engines better than anyone else." He hesitated, glancing sideways at Stan. "I'd feel better to have Eve and Mrs. Staunton with me too."

"Why not? We're merely going to run down the coast and take a look at a desolate key. Just ask them not to mention the trip to anyone."

Farraday nodded. "I'll have the boat ready to leave about eleven."

"You'll keep it as quiet as possible?"

"Nobody will hear a word of it—except those who are going."

It was not until after lunch that Stan succeeded in finding LeRoy at headquarters. The Captain was talking with Sergeant Taft, the ballistic expert. He dismissed the Sergeant when Stan came in and took a chair. On the Captain's desk lay a Browning Automatic, equipped with a silencer, a leather key-case containing a dozen slim keys, a blackjack, and several sheets of perforated notebook paper held together with a light rubber band.

"There's the gun that nearly finished your joy-ride last night," LeRoy said the Browning toward Stan. Stan left it on the desk. "I resent the implication—but how do you know?"

"While you were sleeping off your drunken stupor with that woman this morning, Detective Hogue brought your coupe here. Sergeant Hart says the hole in the rear glass jibes with the gun."

"Smart stuff. Did the rest of the collection come out of Fowler's car too?"

"How did you know we'd found Fowler's car?"

"I know your perseverance, Vince. When you have anything obvious to go on. It's the reward of staunch soberness and a firm moral virtue. Where was it?"

"I shouldn't tell you—but we found it abandoned in an alley off Red Road near the S.A.L. railroad yards. I'd like to know where the dickens it's been. We've turned this town upside down."

"I think I know where it's been."

"Where?" LeRoy shot at him.

"I said: 'I think.' It's probably only a drunken hallucination. I'm certainly not going to put myself on record. It makes no difference now, anyhow—since you've found it."

"I'd like to wring your neck, Stan. You're such pleasant company today—and so helpful."

"I'm a sensitive soul who has been deeply wounded by crude assertions concerning my life and loves—and my head still hurts!"

LeRoy put his thoughts into a couple of words which caused Stan to shudder. "I heard from South Africa," he added venomously. "Try to be of some help. Edward Fowler answers the description of Major Edward Flint, ex-Intelligence Officer, soldier of fortune, prospector, and big game hunter."

"Prospector for what?"

"They didn't say. Gold, I presume. Isn't there gold in Africa?"

"Plenty of it." Stan had interlarded his strong fingers and was wiggling them with enjoyment. "I was damn close, Vince. Yesterday I got the answer. This clinches it. Edward Fowler was a detective." He outlined for the Captain the reasons which had brought him to such a conclusion the day before, and finished by saying: "He was big game hunting here, Vince! The big game got him!"

LeRoy kept pursing his lips, an unflinching sign he was excited. "That's the real dope, Stan—the first real dope!"

"There may be realer dope than that before we get through—opium! Listen to this." He repeated the Commander's story. "I'm going to take a look at that key tonight. Farraday has agreed to let us use the Swampfire. I want you to go along. If we're backing a powerful narcotic ring, Vince, we don't dare waste time—nor overlook a bet. Somebody else may discover too much for their own good and be put out of the way any minute."

"Why not? We're merely going to run down the coast and take a look at a desolate key. Just ask them not to mention the trip to anyone."

Farraday nodded. "I'll have the

boat ready to leave about eleven."

"You'll keep it as quiet as possible?"

"Nobody will hear a word of it—except those who are going."

It was not until after lunch that Stan succeeded in finding LeRoy at headquarters. The Captain was talking with Sergeant Taft, the ballistic expert. He dismissed the Sergeant when Stan came in and took a chair. On the Captain's desk lay a Browning Automatic, equipped with a silencer, a leather key-case containing a dozen slim keys, a blackjack, and several sheets of perforated notebook paper held together with a light rubber band.

"While you were sleeping off your drunken stupor with that woman this morning, Detective Hogue brought your coupe here. Sergeant Hart says the hole in the rear glass jibes with the gun."

secured his folder out of the desk drawer and opened it before him. "I've run up a dead end road on information. Get this: I've used every available means to get information about those present at the Sunset Saturday night. The Farradays are wealthy people. Outside of the boy's tendency to be a bit wild—they're O.K. Lydia Staunton was a show girl who married into dough. She came of a good family—decent, respectable people. Her husband was A. V. Staunton, a merchant. He died in 1928 and left her plenty—part of which she dropped on the market in 1929. I think she plans to marry Farraday."

"And how," said Stan.

"You know more about Millie LaFrance than I do." LeRoy turned over the sheet of paper. "Ben Eckhardt's dead—a small-timer gone where he belongs. Eric Dawson's a graduate of Annapolis, retired in 1930 with a Commander's pay—respectable as my great aunt's antimacassar. Served in the war and the Far East. They're the sheep."

"Glen Neal?"

"Pink tea newshawk who makes a good living dancing with debutantes' mamas. Brainless and harmless. I've known him for five years."

"All right," said Stan. "Don't get mad about it. Feed me the goats."

"Dave Button. His publishers say he has been writing books about the killing on the Cranston Castle. He is true—verified by Scotland Yard. He was acquitted on a self-defense plea, due to Fowler's testimony."

"The Major was using the name of 'Edward Fowler' at the time?"

"Evidently. That's what the yard called him in their report. They have no additional information about Button, and they checked his record from soup to nuts at the time of the killing. He's been all over the world. I don't like card-sharps, Stan."

"Nor wild young lads with too much money."

"Nor wild young lads with too much money," LeRoy repeated emphatically, "and the drunken detectives their fathers employ to help confuse the police—"

"As though a score of drunken detectives could add to such perfect barabanda."

"My Spanish is faulty, amigo Arroz, but I can guess that barabanda refers to already existing confusion. Well, you've added to it!"

"Umm! I like that," said Stan. "I think I'll change my name to Miles Standish Arroz."

"The chile king!" added LeRoy. "Do you want to hear about the Bes-singers?" He lifted a fresh sheet from the folder. "They're an interesting pair. We photographed a number of letters found in their rooms at the Pescador Hotel. Some of them were from a firm in Kansas City—brokers called Crass & Bremen. The police report that the firm consists of two men and a one room office. Mr. Durlin Bessinger is an old and valued customer—a retired grain merchant who has made much money gambling on futures. There were other letters from dealers in grain in various parts of the country. They turned out to be mailing addresses—and here's one for the book—all the letters were written on the same machine."

"You've located it?"

The Captain shook his head. "It may be the one in the office of Crass & Bremen—but what of it? There's no law against that. Where does that pair fit in, Stan?"

SEASONED BY SERVICE

MOST of the people in this company are in telephone work to stay. This is an organization of men and women seasoned by service and tested by time.

The figures prove it. More than half of our 16,000 people have had ten or more years of telephone experience. Three thousand have served 20 years or more. Nearly 750 have been in this business from 30 to 50 years! And those who have reached top positions have earned and learned their jobs by rising through the ranks.

Yet we have plenty of young blood and youthful ideas. We're still "going places." Still speeding up your telephone service and looking for new ways to make it click along more quickly, smoothly, accurately, pleasantly.

Today this state and nation enjoy the finest telephone service in the world. It is our aim to keep your service constantly improving—at a price that insures a fair deal to those who use the service and those whose money and skill make it possible.

When orders are few and far between and sales costs must be cut, smart business men turn to the telephone. Long Distance calls cover out-of-the-way customers quickly, easily and economically. They bring in extra sales at a cost that leaves you a profit. Try the telephone first!

Mutual understanding and cooperation between the people of this company and the people we serve are essential to the high quality and low cost of your telephone service.

ON SCREENS IN BRISTOL

Those who are familiar with New York's commission districts—those streets and areas to which the farmers of Long Island, New Jersey, and upstate bring their vegetables and produce early each week-day morning—are going to be pleasantly surprised when they see the Warner Bros. "Cosmopolitan" melodrama, "Racket Busters," which opens today at the Grand Theatre.

Intensely life-like reproductions of the shops and sidewalks wherein are piled many thousands of crates of lettuce, celery, tomatoes, squash and the like were constructed especially for the picture. And the vegetables themselves were all real—so real, indeed, that when they had ended their usefulness as subjects for the camera of cinematographer Arthur Edson, they were carted to the hospitals and relief stations of Hollywood and Los Angeles.

BRISTOL

One of nature's most startling phenomena, the "Northern Lights," comes to the screen in a feature picture for the first time in Paramount's Alaskan saga: "Spawn of the North," which had its local opening Sunday at the Bristol Theatre.

Probably more famous than any other feature of the Northland, with the possible exception of the polar bears, the "Northern Lights" were filmed for Director Henry Hathaway by the camera crew he sent on a six months' tour of Alaska for the purpose of gathering background material.

According to scientific authorities, the phenomenon is of electrical origin and is due to the stellar reflection on Arctic ice. It is visible only at night, and consists of bright shafts of yellow, red and white light forming a corona over the northern horizon.
